Should I stay, or should I go? That's the question every homeowner must answer when weighing the advantages of buying a new house versus renovating a current dwelling. Actually, it's the question you will answer twice: initially, when you make the Big Decision, one way or the other, and next, when you consider whether to stay in the house during renovation—also known as the Sure-Fire Path to Insanity. A rule of thumb is if more than half your house is involved, and if the kitchen and baths are included, move out. No one ever wants to do that, but consult your professional for advice.

And that brings us to this Resource Directory. Because even though deciding to renovate seemed like your biggest decision, it's really just the beginning. From there, a multitude of options, questions, possibilities, problems, rules and regulations awaits. Unless you want to become an authority on city building codes, energy rebates, paint colors, furniture styles, the fine points of foundation infrastructure and much, much more, the most reasonable alternative is to hire an expert in each field to interpret your dream. With that in mind, Austin Monthly HOME has researched the pros who specialize in renovation. We have come up with a list that will help you get started and help you finish. And when you're done, you'll be glad it's over and happy you did it. And you'll have a brand-new house that feels like you have lived in it forever.
